

Mastery: Deepening Practice, Expanding Connection

by Donita Decker and Roger Marsh, Mastery Teachers

People engage in Mastery for a variety of reasons: to deepen their personal practice, to develop as a group leader, to develop as an ITP teacher. On this last point, over the past six years, a core of Mastery teachers has developed that can both teach the practice as well as lead an ITP group's development and transformation. Over the past few years, this teaching capacity has expanded beyond the Mastery program into other channels of service and expression. One of the most exciting new initiatives is a program to send Mastery teachers to train ITP groups around the country.

This special program will allow Mastery teachers and ITP groups to work together on a very personal basis, expanding the depth and impact of practice as well as the connection and collaboration between practitioners. Through our Group Leader Elevation and Evolution (GLEE) program we have already been working with ITP group leaders throughout the country.

We look forward to having Mastery teachers personally visit groups to conduct Mastery intensives and LET trainings, further deepening the practice, expanding our connections, and taking everything to a whole new level! If you want to get more information about having a Mastery teacher visit your group or conduct a special training in your city, please contact either of us and we will be glad to review the program with you.
